

Here the Seventh-day Adventists take the judgment at the house of God to refer to the investigative judgment of God's people. However, this is an assumption, for there is no evidence to prove that the judgment at the house of God in this passage refers to the investigative judgment of God's people. Moreover, the Apostle Paul distinctly declared in First Corinthians 11:32 that when the people of God are judged, they are chastened by the Lord. Therefore, Peter did not predict in this passage that the people of God would be judged in the investigative judgment, but he taught that it was time for God to begin the chastisement of His people on earth for their sin in order that they might become more holy, and that if God's people on earth received chastisement for their sin, those who refused to believe and obey the Gospel of God would receive punishment for their sin in the hereafter which would far exceed the chastisement which God's people on earth received for their sin.

The Seventh-day Adventists claim that Jesus predicted in Luke 20:35 that the people of God who were worthy because they had obeyed God's law and had repented of and confessed every violation of it would be accounted worthy by God to obtain the age to come and the resurrection of the dead in the investigative judgment. However, this is not what Jesus predicted in this passage, for Jesus did not say anything in this passage about the investigative judgment. Therefore, to say that Jesus did say anything in this passage about the investigative judgment is to read something into this passage which is not there. Furthermore, Jesus did not say in this passage that those who would be accounted worthy by God to obtain the age to come and the resurrection of the dead would be the people of God who were worthy because they had obeyed God's law and had repented of and confessed every violation of it. On the contrary, Jesus said in this passage that those who would be accounted worthy by God to obtain the age to come and the resurrection of the dead would be the people of
